

The Medical Library Association Guide to Cancer Information

NEW

If you are searching for a guide to cancer-related information that stands out from all of the others, you've found it. Now, medical, academic, and public librarians—and oncology patients, caregivers, and researchers—can easily identify the most up-to-date, authoritative cancer-related information available today.

Author Ruti Volk, MLA member and manager of both the Patient Education Resource Center at the Comprehensive Cancer Center and the Wellness Resource Center at the Cardiovascular Center, University of Michigan—Ann Arbor, provides basic concepts and terminology followed by in-depth descriptions of twenty-five specific types of adult cancer and ten childhood cancers.

For each disease, Volk explores the information needs specific to its patient population along with a detailed list of essential resources:

- consumer health titles
- CD-ROMs
- Websites
- supportive patient organizations, and more.

Using a clear, unambiguous writing style, she also examines important issues such as:

- drug therapy
- complementary therapies
- fertility
- nutrition
- talking with children about the disease
- quality-of-life topics including body image, pain control, survivorship, prevention issues, and alternative therapies

Here is a first in the field of oncology research. For librarians, it is an invaluable tool for meeting the vital needs of their users concerning one of today's most critical topics. For patients and caregivers, it is a bridge to clear, definitive information and an opportunity to make informed life decisions.

"There are tens of thousands of sites related to cancer—so it is more important than ever...to have a reliable resource... [This book] is the new standard against which all others will be judged."

From the foreword by Max S. Wicha, director of the Comprehensive Care Center at the University of Michigan and board chairman of the Association of American Cancer Institutes.
